Bagus graduated from Atma Jaya Catholic University in 2006 and earned his Master of Business Administration (MBA) from Gadjah Mada University in 2012. He began his professional career as an Anti-Money Laundering Investigator at HSBC, one of the world's most respected international financial institutions in the banking industry. Alongside this role, he also served as a Legal Advisor at the accounting firm KAP Bambang, Sutjipto Ngumar & Rekan, where he provided legal assistance to clients across diverse industries, including manufacturing, banking, services, and government compliance audits.

Since 2009, Bagus has served in a government institution, where he has been extensively involved in preparing and drafting various laws and regulations, as well as advising on administrative matters and government procurement policies, structures, and mechanisms. In this capacity, he has represented the institution in negotiations with other government agencies, a role that demands deep understanding of Indonesia's complex bureaucratic landscape and strong strategic acumen.

Throughout his public service career, Bagus has continually enhanced his negotiation skills through active engagement with a wide range of stakeholders, including international organizations, foreign government representatives, United Nations (UN) bodies, and non-UN entities. His responsibilities often involve safeguarding Indonesia's interests in international forums—where precision, accuracy, and adherence to international law are paramount.

In the private sector, Bagus has advised numerous companies not only on legal and regulatory matters, but also on business strategy and commercial development. Leveraging his strong negotiation skills, analytical thinking, and meticulous attention to detail, he has successfully assisted both public and private sector clients in high-level negotiations with foreign and local government institutions as well as multinational corporations.
